ABSTRACT

The National Rural Career Guidance Project for Rural and Small Schools was designed to promote active exchange of information among rural schools and to provide services to administrators, counselors, and teachers wishing to implement or upgrade career guidance activities in their schools. The directory was developed for the purpose of providing school personnel with names, addresses and other pertinent information related to career guidance consultants within their geographic area. The 25 consultants were gleaned from 421 nominees received by soliciting state directors of vocational education, career education, or guidance, as well as counselor educators and intermediate educational agencies. Those making recommendations were asked to pay particular attention to four aspects of their nominees: experience in career guidance, experience in rural schools, resources available to the nominees, and time available to devote to work with rural school groups. The directory has been organized by state in alphabetical order. The name, address, position, telephone number, and areas of expertise are given for each consultant. (BR)

Introduction

The National Rural Career Guidance Project for Rural and Small Schools was designed to promote active exchange of information among rural schools and to provide services to administrators, counselors, and teachers wishing to implement or upgrade career guidance activities in their schools. In addition to providing direct consultative services through correspondence and the project's Hot Line, developing newsletters and presenting workshops, the National Rural Career Guidance Project has developed a variety of products which include a film strip on Rural Career Guidance, an Exemplary Program Directory, and a Rural Career Guidance Consultant Directory. The Rural Career Guidance Directory was developed for the purpose of providing school personnel with names, addresses and other pertinent information relating to career guidance consultants within their geographic area.

Beginning September 1977, letters describing the purpose of the directory and requesting nominations for career guidance consultants were mailed to State Directors of Vocational Education, State Directors of Career Education, State Directors of Guidance, Counselor Educators, and Intermediate Educational Agencies. In this letter, those individuals making recommendations were asked to pay particular attention to the following regarding potential nominees:

1. Experience in career guidance.
2. Experience in rural schools.
3. Resources available to the nominees.
4. Time available to devote to work with rural school groups.

421 nominations were received from the 2200-plus nationwide contacts made by mail. Each nominee was then contacted by project staff in order to describe the project, to announce his/her nomination and to solicit permission for including them in the directory. The letter also included a form for indicating areas of expertise and pertinent professional expe-erience which nominees were to fill out and return were they to accept the nomination.

As a result of these initiatives, a total of 251 nominees elected to participate in the project and appear as consultants in this directory. The directory has been organized by state in alphabetical order. The left side column of each state entered provides name, address, position and telephone number of each consultant. The consultant's areas of expertise appear in the right hand column. If the potential for implementing new or upgrading existing programs exists, we urge school personnel to avail themselves of the wealth of experience and ability relevant to rural career guidance represented and made available through this directory.

NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

This rural school guidance project represents an effort to build upon the unique strengths of the rural settings and to overcome the information, training and consultation problems faced by educators, parents, counselors, employers, community agencies and students in rural schools and communities. The National Advisory Committee was designed to provide assessment, reaction and advice to the relevance and feasibility of the communication network processes, products and services generated as a result of this project. Individuals serving on this committee were selected for their national recognition for work within their professions. Primary emphasis on the committee is given to education, business, labor, and counseling and guidance.
